What Happens When You Stop Marketing?

The Rise and Fall of Colorado Tourism

Dr. Bill Siegel
Founder & Executive Chairman
Summary

This paper provides through over thirty years of research a quintessential demonstration of the necessity and financial value of marketing. It details the state of Colorado’s roller-coaster funding ride, including the complete loss of its tourism marketing budget, and the subsequent successful fight for renewed financial support.

In 1993, Colorado became the first ever state to eliminate its tourism marketing function, when it cut its $12 million promotion budget to zero. As a result, Colorado’s domestic market share plunged 30% within two years, representing a loss of over $1.4 billion in tourism revenue annually. Over time, the revenue loss increased to well over $2 billion yearly. In the important summer resort segment, Colorado dropped from first place among states to 17th.

It took until 2000 for the industry to convince the legislature to reinstate funding with a modest $5 million budget. Research tracked the effectiveness of the state’s tourism campaigns over the next few years and demonstrated a return on investment (ROI) of over 12:1. In 2006, the tourism promotion budget was upped to $19 million.

Since then, with substantial marketing dollars in place, Colorado’s visitation numbers have shown a remarkable recovery, although it took until 2015 to regain its lost market share.

The Colorado saga provides a cautionary tale for financial decision-makers who, in these difficult economic times and an unprecedented pandemic, are naturally looking at major cutbacks in all areas, including promotion. It clearly illustrates that marketing is an essential net generator of revenue and profits to the organization, not a cost.
Introduction

Colorado became Longwoods International’s first U.S. state client in 1986, and we have monitored its tourism performance through large-scale survey research continuously ever since. As a result, we were able to track the dramatic growth of the state’s visitation as it employed a successful marketing campaign, its disastrous fall when funding was cut to zero in 1993, and its eventual recovery when funding was finally restored.

I first documented this case in 2006 with a White Paper, “The Rise and Fall of Colorado Tourism,” which has been reposted and cited by major tourism associations, destination marketing organizations, and industry groups to this day. Michele McKenzie, former CEO of the Canadian Tourism Commission, stated that it “has been so well thumbed by tourism industry people that it must be positively dog-eared.”

Now it’s April 2020, and I’m sitting in my home office, isolated because of the current COVID-19 pandemic. This is now resulting in a catastrophic drop in tourism. In Colorado, according to Tourism Economics, the decline in revenue year-to-year is 84%.

In the short term, destination marketing organizations are faced with unprecedented threats to their budgets. Those financed by hotel taxes are in especially dire straits as occupancy has plummeted.

Hopefully, by the time you read this, the pandemic will have subsided, and tourism will be returning to normal, if not escalating because of pent-up demand.

However, for some time after COVID-19 is brought under control, countries, cities and states whose economies have been ravaged will be hard-pressed to provide essential services to their constituents. Tourism budgets will be an easy target for cuts unless the case is made that they are indeed essential for creating economic benefits for residents, not a cost.

The Colorado story is a stunning demonstration of the power of marketing and the downside of indiscriminate budget slashing. You will see why, within the tourism industry, it has become the poster child for justification of marketing funding.

It is in this context that I have updated the Colorado case study, which remains the classic case of what happens when you cut a successful tourism marketing campaign.
The Rise of Colorado Tourism

Our case study begins in 1983, when the Colorado Tourism Board was created to promote the state. To generate dedicated promotional funding for the new tourism board, a small but broad tax of 0.1% on travel-related products and services was enacted. The original tourism tax had a five-year sunset provision, but in 1988, because of the program’s success, the legislature increased the tax to 0.2% and extended it for five more years.

Longwoods International was first hired by the Colorado Tourism Board in 1986 to conduct image and visitor research for the state. We found that, with the exception of skiers, Colorado was largely a regional destination drawing people from neighboring states like Texas, Nebraska and Kansas who wanted a change from prairies and flat farmland. Given the new marketing budget, and since Colorado was blessed with a unique travel generator – the Rocky Mountains – there was a significant opportunity to draw visitors from across the country and transform the state into a national “fly-in” destination.

The results of our first benchmark study showed, however, that Colorado’s image was weak. While it was seen as having beautiful mountain scenery and wilderness areas (good for skiing and outdoor recreation), Colorado was perceived as lacking amenities for a summer vacation, such as good hotels and restaurants, and – after you’ve stared at the mountains – not having a lot of things to see and do.

We summarized the perception of Colorado at that time as “Mountains, Mountains, and More Mountains.” Remarkably, the state was reinforcing this negative stereotype by showing empty mountain landscapes in its promotional material, including the cover of its vacation planning guide.
Inside the brochure, the visuals were stunning, but showed more examples of mountain wilderness, devoid of vacationers enjoying themselves.

Our recommended strategy was to reposition Colorado as “Mountains and Much More,” with the “Much More” to be determined by the research. The goal was to hit the top hot buttons in terms of what people wanted from a Colorado vacation. We suggested building on Colorado’s natural strength as the iconic Rocky Mountain experience, but moving the mountains to the background, with people, fun, excitement, and attractions in the foreground.

Our visitor research uncovered an additional problem: While Colorado ranked number one among U.S. states in the ski resort category, it ranked only 14th in the summer resort segment.

Upscale resort communities like Aspen and Vail were world-renowned among skiers but suffered for business after the snow melted. We were puzzled by this because summer is the high season for Colorado vacations overall. The reason given was that the industry had not traditionally promoted the resorts for summer.

The logical solution was to transform the state’s ski towns into all-season resorts. The infrastructure was already in place, including hotels, restaurants, bars, shops, and attractions. Ideally the costs could be amortized year-round, and local businesses could hire permanent rather than seasonal staff.

We recommended featuring the resort experience in the summer campaign to demonstrate that there were amenities like golf, spas, excellent hotels and fine dining up in the mountains, not just empty wilderness.

A series of clever magazine ads was developed by the Board’s Denver agency, Karsh Hagan, based on the new strategy, and they ran in national and regional publications. Over the next few years, the campaign built impressive equity in the marketplace:

- When we tracked the state’s image a few years after the campaign was inaugurated, it had shifted from somewhat dull and limited to an exciting, must-see destination.
- The number of people calling or writing in response to the ads increased dramatically, and the cost per inquiry plummeted.
- The state was evolving from a regional to a national destination.
- By 1992, Colorado had moved to 1st among U.S. states in the summer resort category,
  - Up from 14th just a few years earlier.
- Colorado’s overall market share of U.S. travelers grew by 50%, representing over $1 billion in additional spending annually.

By every indication, Colorado was now perceived as the “Mountains and Much More” destination that visitors wanted. The advertising campaign was a proven success, bringing visitor expenditures, tax dollars and jobs into the state.
“Mountains, and Much More!”
Colorado Print Advertising Campaign

This is Where the Deer And The Antelope Play. But Why Let Them Have All the Fun?

Colorado Tourism Board, Box 38700
Dept. 10, Denver, Colorado 80238
Name: ________________________
Address: ______________________
City: ________________________
State: ________________________
Zip: ________________________
Telephone: ______________________

Visit A Place Where the Zoos Don’t Have Fences and the Museums Don’t Have Walls.

Colorado Tourism Board, Box 38700
Dept. 10, Denver, Colorado 80238
Name: ________________________
Address: ______________________
City: ________________________
State: ________________________
Zip: ________________________

And the Rockies. Go! A little differently when you vacation in Colorado. Here, the mighty Rockies are your Miocene Park. Ride a horse. Hike a trail. See how big nature’s sculptures work in the Garden of the Gods. Or follow the footpaths of dinosaurs in Dinosaur National Monument. For one of the ordinary vacations, send for your free Vacation Guide, or call toll-free and ask for extension 1010. 1-800-433-2536.

After A Day In the Mountains, Most People Could Eat A Horse. Luckily, They Don’t Have To.

Colorado Tourism Board, Box 38700
Dept. 10, Denver, Colorado 80238
Name: ________________________
Address: ______________________
City: ________________________
State: ________________________
Zip: ________________________

Besides All The Historical Sites, Western Museums And Indian Ruins, We Have A Few Other Points Of Interest.

Colorado Tourism Board, Box 38700
Dept. 10, Denver, Colorado 80238
Name: ________________________
Address: ______________________
City: ________________________
State: ________________________
Zip: ________________________

Sometimes it seems like all people are interested in are monuments. It’s true. So we’ve decided to build our own, and it’s called Colorado. Our monument has mountains and valleys, rivers and lakes, and a future that will always be changing. It’s a good thing we have so much. Mountains, rivers, lakes, and forests. That way we can always keep coming back. And if you ever decide to come back, you can always find us. We’re the ones with the mountains, rivers, and forests. It’s just too beautiful to leave.

Or call toll-free and ask for extension 1010. 1-800-433-2536.
The Fall of Colorado Tourism

Then disaster struck. Anti-tax activists successfully spearheaded an amendment to the State’s Constitution called the Taxpayers Bill of Rights which required any new taxes or tax increases to be approved by state voters in a referendum. This effectively removed the traditional responsibility of taxation from politicians and placed it directly in the hands of the populace.

By the early 1990’s, the Colorado Tourism Board had a dedicated budget of approximately $12 million for tourism promotion, paid for by a tax of 20 cents on every hundred dollars of tourism expenditures, including hotels, rental cars, outdoor recreation, restaurants, and attractions. It was a very small tax, largely paid by people from out of state, but it was a tax nonetheless. Over the years, we have conducted many public opinion polls for governments on fiscal issues and have almost never seen a tax people liked. Unfortunately for the state’s travel industry, Colorado’s tourism tax was no exception.

The Colorado Tourism Board had a five-year mandate with a sunset clause coming in 1993, just one year after the Taxpayers Bill of Rights passed in 1992. Prior to that, tourism funding decisions were largely invisible to the public. Were it not for the new bill, the Board’s mandate would likely have been quietly renewed by the legislature without controversy. Tourism was, after all, a key industry for the state, and the campaign was working well.

But now the question had to be decided by a referendum of voters, with their new-found power to veto taxes like this one. Most damaging was the wording of the referendum question, which framed the tourism tax as a new one, not a continuation of a successful mechanism for bringing visitors’ dollars into the state coffers. Technically speaking, it was indeed a new tax because the sunset clause ended funding for the Colorado Tourism Board until it was officially renewed.

The local tourism industry mounted a defense by running television commercials that proclaimed how important the industry was to the state, and how many people it employed. All of this was true, but the industry had picked the wrong issue to make their case. Our polling research at the time showed that Colorado voters already understood the importance of tourism. They simply didn’t want a tourism tax.

What voters did not understand was that the existing tax was only 0.2% of tourism expenditures and that it was primarily paid for by out-of-state visitors, not by them.
When we explained these facts to survey respondents, they flipped their opinion and supported the tax. Incredibly, they actually believed the tax was too small!

Unfortunately, the industry did not address the tax issue, and continued to talk about how important tourism was for the state.

Just before the vote, the opposition came out strongly against the tourism tax. It’s not that we are against tourism, they reasoned. But the Rocky Mountains were there long before the Colorado Tourism Board, and they’d be there long afterwards. Surely the tourists will keep on coming.

The opponents’ coup de grace was to argue that, if the rich ski resorts could afford over a million dollars to run a propaganda advertising campaign on behalf of the tourism tax, then surely they should not be lining up at the trough for public funds. Let those fat-cat corporate welfare bums pay for promoting tourism themselves. Their message received extensive media coverage on the eve of the referendum, but the industry had no spokesperson in place to challenge their point of view.

They missed the point that the Tourism Board was primarily responsible for promoting summer tourism, and that the ski operators separately promoted winter with private-sector funds. The main beneficiaries of summer tourism spending were a myriad of small businesses across the state, the kind of businesses that don’t have the money, time, or mandate to organize a state tourism campaign. Nonetheless, their simple message resonated with voters and carried the day.

In the 1993 referendum, the tourism tax was defeated by a margin of 55% against. Shortly afterwards, Colorado became the only state in the U.S. without an official tourism function. The phones kept on ringing, but there was nobody left to answer them.

The results were devastating and surprisingly immediate:

- Within two years, according to our Longwoods Travel USA® syndicated tracking program, Colorado lost 30% of its market share of U.S. tourism.
- This translated into the equivalent of over $1.4 billion annually in lost revenue to the state.
- By the late 1990’s, the damage had escalated to $2.4 billion each year.
- An independent economic impact study conducted by Dean Runyan Associates confirmed the decline of the tourism industry in terms of its contribution to the state economy from 1996 to 2000.
- After moving from 14th to 1st place nationally in the summer resort category, Colorado slipped to 17th place in 1994, just one year after the loss of funding.
- We observed a dramatic increase in the number of Colorado residents and travelers staying with friends and relatives, as opposed to high-yield customers.
- Colorado was starting to shift back toward a regional drive destination, as opposed to the national fly-in venue it had become as a result of marketing.
The Colorado case study answers the question that we as marketers would all like the answer to, but would never have the desire or nerve to test: What happens if you take a successful marketing program and cut it to zero? It took just two years for Colorado’s business to bottom out.

It was like owning a Ferrari, but not having the money for gasoline.

Private Sector Funding Model Fails

After the loss of funding, a new agency, the Colorado Travel & Tourism Authority was established by the legislature to attempt to market the state with private funds. The idea was for the industry to be self-assessing, and to use the money for tourism promotion. The Colorado Travel & Tourism Authority had staff but no marketing dollars. They shared responsibility with the original agency, the Colorado Tourism Board, which had responsibility for welcome center operation, but had no staff. The two agencies fought regularly over funding and areas of responsibility.

Despite representing a state with one of the strongest private tourism sectors in the U.S., the new Colorado Travel & Tourism Authority was unable to raise sustainable funding or to coordinate its private sector partners under a marketing umbrella. It was like trying to herd cats. Industry contributions to the cause were not mandatory, so the people who paid their share were rightly resentful of those who passed the buck. Not surprisingly, free ridership prevailed over altruism and dedication to the common good.

It was becoming increasingly clear that the private sector funding model was a failure. Each player in Colorado’s widespread tourism industry had its own marketing job to do, whether it’s a ski resort like Aspen, Vail, Breckenridge, or Steamboat Springs; a city like Denver or Colorado Springs; an attraction, airline, hotel, rental car firm, etc. Each was naturally motivated to get its own message out. But tourists can stay at a Sheraton or rent a car from Hertz virtually anywhere. For them, the hook is Colorado.

In 1997, I was invited by the University of Denver to present our research quantifying the state’s tourism decline at a meeting of frustrated industry leaders. The facilitator, Robert Mill, a faculty member in the business school, concluded the session by asking the assembled audience to shout out, on the count of three, the name of the Colorado organization they represented.

All at once, each person in the audience called out the name of their respective city, resort, hotel, service or attraction: “Denver — Vail — Marriott — Colorado Springs — Boulder — Avis — Grand Junction — Garden of the Gods” ... and a myriad of other names.

The resulting cacophony was incomprehensible.

“Louder!!” said Professor Mill. “I can’t hear a thing except noise.”

The audience tried again, louder this time, but the result was even less intelligible.

“Now on the count of three, tell me what state you live in,” the good professor intoned. “One, Two, Three:”

Their answer came through as clear as a bell: “COLORADO!!” “Now you see why we need to speak with one voice,” he said.

It was a great illustration of Benjamin Franklin’s famous quotation at the signing of the Declaration of Independence in 1776: “We must all hang together, or assuredly we shall all hang separately.”

The professor’s message was clear: It’s the people of Colorado who own Colorado, not Vail, Sheraton, or Hertz. Without the glue of public funds for tourism promotion, the industry would not be able to coordinate and deliver a clear message to the traveling public.

Rising from the Ashes

Gradually, momentum for a return to state funding began to build. We were asked to make a presentation to Senator Elsie Lacey, head of the joint budget committee, illustrating the loss of revenue to the state since the tourism tax was defeated in 1993. She was sympathetic because her constituents included many small businesses who were suffering from the loss of visitors.

Then in 1998, Longwoods International was commissioned by the Colorado Tourism Board and the Colorado Travel & Tourism Authority to prepare a White Paper reviewing the situation and recommending a solution based on three different funding scenarios. The White Paper was approved by the industry in 1999 and distributed to legislators and the media. It was well received, and as a result, the two feuding state tourism agencies voted to disband.

They were replaced on July 1, 2000, by the new Colorado Tourism Office, which received $5 million in funding from the state. After a seven-year hiatus, Colorado was back in the tourism business again, but with that limited amount of funding, it was an uphill battle. Despite the fact that Colorado is a long-haul destination and has to work harder to attract visitors, its marketing budget was still less than half the average of other states.

In 2003, Governor Bill Owens championed a one-time $9 million capital infusion for tourism promotion, but the tourism industry continued to fight for sustained dollars.

Working hard to make the most of its meager resources, the Colorado Tourism Office launched a new campaign promoting the state. The priority was to demonstrate to the legislature that the limited investment of public funds generated a positive return on taxpayers’ investment in tourism promotion.

Longwoods was hired to evaluate the impact of three years of advertising using our highly conservative methodology for measuring ROI. The results indicated that the campaign generated major impacts in the target markets:

- 72.1 million American adults were aware of the 2004 campaign.
- Top-of-mind awareness of Colorado as a “dream destination” was significantly lifted by the campaign in all three years.
- The image of Colorado was enhanced by the campaign in each year as well.
- People aware of the campaign were about twice as likely to be planning a trip to Colorado versus those unaware.
- From October 2003 to December 2004, the campaign resulted in an incremental 5.3 million trips, representing 17% of Colorado’s total tourism visitation.
- In 2004, this generated $1.4 billion of additional spending and $89.5 million in state and local taxes.
- The campaign appeared to be building equity over time.
The research also revealed a major untapped opportunity for the state: Despite now ranking 5th among states as a dream destination (after Hawaii, Florida, Alaska and California), Colorado ranked only 23rd in actual visitation. At the same time, Colorado ranked 35th in funding for tourism promotion.

There was a clear opportunity to close the gap between Americans’ desire to visit Colorado and their actual behavior with a properly funded promotional campaign.

The Denver Post summed it up nicely: “The moral of the story is that in the modern tourism economy, it’s not enough to have spectacular scenery. You also have to advertise your product. While Colorado was hiding our state’s virtues under a bushel, other states were promoting vigorously and stealing our business — Politicians are always pledging to run state government like a business. But in business, you often need to invest money to make money. With a return of more than $15 in tax revenue for every buck we spend on promotion, it’s high time Colorado got back into the tourism business.”

After a dry spell lasting more than a decade, Colorado’s tourism industry was able to put forward a credible case to the Governor and State Legislature to support tourism with sustainable dollars. In June 2006, House Bill 1201 was signed into law, which almost quadrupled the tourism marketing budget to $19 million. No longer the poor cousin to its state peers, Colorado moved from 35th in tourism spending to about 7th. “In every case, we will make more money than we spend for these incentives,” Governor Owens told the press.

The extra dollars allowed the state to get its message out to more key markets, such as Boston, Minneapolis, New York, Phoenix, San Diego, San Francisco, and Washington DC. The media buy included television, radio, magazine, newspaper, direct marketing, and search engine marketing. Additional flights of advertising were run in fall and winter.

Longwoods conducted online surveys to measure the impact of the “Let’s Talk Colorado” campaign, with data collection in October 2007 and May 2008. The results came back as very positive:

- The campaign lifted the image of Colorado overall and generated a positive halo effect on specific attributes that motivate people to visit the state.

- Future intentions to visit Colorado were significantly higher as a function of campaign exposure.

The Bottom Line:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Description</th>
<th>Amount</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Advertising Expenditures</td>
<td>$10,742,000</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Total Visitors Generated</td>
<td>5,973,000</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Total Spending Generated</td>
<td>$2,078 Million</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Tax Dollars Generated</td>
<td>$139.3 Million</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Visitor Spending per Ad Dollar</td>
<td>$193</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Tax Dollars Returned per Ad Dollar Invested</td>
<td>$12.96</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

We continued to track visitors to Colorado through our quarterly Longwoods Travel USA® syndicated research program. With a significant marketing program in place, Colorado tourism has undergone a major recovery.

By 2007, travel to Colorado rebounded to 28 million visitors spending $9.8 billion enjoying their trips to the state.
As the Director of the Colorado Tourism Office, Cathy Ritter, stated in her video summary of the Colorado case, it took over 20 years, but the state finally regained its market share of U.S. visitation in 2015.

In 2018, domestic visitation reached an all-time high of 85.2 million who spent a record $22.3 billion on Colorado trips.

Conclusion

The Colorado case study offers us a unique glimpse into a 30-year program of research that documents the stunning impact of the state’s virtually complete and unprecedented elimination of its tourism marketing budget. In what may well be the classic demonstration of the financial value of marketing, the case clearly documents the lost opportunity when funding was cut:

- Over $2 billion in lost sales annually by cutting $12 million in promotional dollars.
- Over 30% decline in market share.

It shows us what was gained once state funding for marketing was reinstated:

- A huge rebound in Colorado visitation, tourism expenditures, and market share.

A key lesson learned is that, after the budget was cut to zero, the state’s effort to create a private-sector funding model was an abject failure. The tourism industry is dominated by small businesses with limited financial resources, the major players had their own interests at heart, and none represented the Colorado, the key brand of interest to consumers.

Within tourism, the Colorado story has become a legend, with many of the state’s competitors citing these numbers to their legislators as evidence for why their programs should be funded, not cut. In these challenging economic times, when marketing budgets are an easy target in the private sector and public sector alike, the lesson from this case is quite simple:

THINK TWICE BEFORE SLASHING YOUR MARKETING BUDGET. DON’T BE THE NEXT COLORADO!
About the Author

Dr. Bill Siegel, Founder & Executive Chairman
Longwoods International

Bill founded Longwoods in 1978 and has built the firm into a leading travel research consultancy that conducts strategic studies globally for clients at the national, state, city, and regional levels.

He began his career as an academic, teaching psychology, research methods and statistics at Western University, and was invited to the University of Western Australia as Distinguished Visiting Lecturer. He switched to market research when he was hired to design and manage a multimillion-dollar advertising ROI study for the CEOs of the phone companies across Canada.

Bill is internationally recognized as a leading figure in marketing, advertising, and tourism research. His work has been cited in broadcast and print media, including USA Today, Newsweek, the New York Times, and the Times of London. He is a regular speaker at conferences and meetings, such as the Advertising Research Foundation, the American Marketing Association, the Brookings Institution, The Travel & Tourism Research Association, the Bureau of Broadcast Measurement, the Economic Development Administration, the European Society of Marketing Research, and the Public Relations Society of America.

Bill has served on the boards for a number of organizations, including Georgia Tech, Waterloo University, Ryerson University, the University of Florida, the Travel & Tourism Research Association, and Destinations International. He was honored as a Ryerson Fellow, Executive in Residence at Temple University, and was commissioned an Honorary Citizen of New Jersey and Kentucky Colonel.

Bill holds a B.A. (Honors) from the University of Toronto and a Ph.D. in Psychology from the University of Michigan.